HOLIDAY OPEN HOUSE

Oh the weather outside is frightful, but the fire is so delightful at our 16th Annual Hearthside Open House Party on Saturday, December 7 from 1 to 4 p.m. Ring in the holidays with old fashioned “good cheer!” Enjoy festive hors d’oeuvres, Christmas cookies, cranberry punch and hot cider. All served in the beautifully-decorated and historic Caleb Nickerson Homestead. Bring a pair of mittens for our second annual Mitten Tree. All mittens go to the Chatham Children’s Fund. Visit A Great Yarn, 894 Main Street, Chatham, and tell them you’re knitting for the NFA Knitting Tree for a 30 percent discount on Mitten Tree yarn. And don’t forget—you can purchase unique Nickerson gifts at the holiday party!

The Caleb Nickerson Homestead will be open for viewing on Wednesday, December 11 and 18.

STOCKING STUFFERS

The stockings were hung by the chimney with care, in hopes that a Nickerson membership soon would be there. No one is ever too young to join the Nickerson Family Association. A children’s membership at $10 makes the perfect stocking stuffer gift. New this year are membership cards suitable to tuck into the little one’s stockings.

DIG...The dig is over, the archaeologists are gone.

How we miss the excitement of the daily dig at the Nick House! From late July to late September, between three and 12 archaeologists and volunteers toiled at excavating the dig site every day, in all kinds of weather. For over five months between 2016 and 2019, the dig brought to light life as it was lived in the latter half of the 17th century by William and Anne Nickerson. We look forward to archaeologist Craig Chartier’s report on the 2019 season. A traveling exhibit based on the dig is being developed; in conjunction with the Chatham Conservation Foundation, Inc. we are creating an interpreted homestead site.

Archaeological Dig Fleashes Out The Story Of Chatham's Founding Family

by Tim Wood

CHATHAM – When he was first asked to investigate what was believed to be the original homestead of the town's first European settlers, William and Anne Nickerson, archaeologist Craig Chartier didn't expect to find much. He figured he'd dig a few holes "just to make the Nickersons happy."

And indeed, the first few holes yielded nothing. But when he moved farther back from the Nickerson Family Association headquarters, near where a marker had been placed identifying the surrounding land at the original homestead site on land owned by the Chatham Conservation Foundation, that changed.

"The first shovelful we had 17th century artifacts," he said, including a pipe stem. He was able to identify it as being made in Charlestown only between 1670 and 1680. That's when he knew he was on to something, possibly something big.

Last week, Chartier and his company, the New Bedford-based Plymouth Archaeological Rediscovery Project, completed its second major dig on the site, uncovering thousands of artifacts and learning more about how Chatham's founding family lived.

Most significant, the discovery of a "tuyere," a pipe through which air is blown into a furnace, appears to confirm that William Nickerson had a blacksmith forge on the site. There are no other known blacksmith operations from that period on Cape Cod, and very few in Massachusetts.

"People around the world are excited about this," Chartier said.

Nickerson apparently smelted iron, a skill he may have learned in Saugus, at the only ironworks in operation in the region at the time. During much of this season, Chartier and his crew excavated in an area with a lot of slag and charred stone on the eastern edge of the site, which he said looked like a small industrial area. He surmised that Nickerson was smelting bog iron, which is naturally occurring, especially in soil with a lot of clay. The slag was in small concentrations, not large mounds, indicating that the operation was probably small, he said.

Also discovered were crucibles probably used to melt other metals. Large chunks of melted brass and copper were found previously, indicating that Nickerson may have cut up brass kettles or similar items and used the pieces to fashion buttons, buckles or rings, which he may have sold or traded.

"He seemed to become a maker," Chartier said of Nickerson, who was a weaver by trade.

Last year, Chartier uncovered the outline of the Nickerson house, which measured 44-by-20-to-24 feet, enormous for the time the site was occupied, from 1664 to the 1690s. It had a hearth at each end and may have been used as a meetinghouse, he said. Also discovered last year was evidence of a palisade around the compound, which may have been built around the time of King Philip's War, from 1675 to 1678.

There may also have been a need to protect against coastal raiders; the spot was right on the water and at the time, "this was the end of the world."

"It was a very large, very expensive house," Chartier said. A number of silver coins from the era were discovered this season. "If these were lost, it meant they had enough" not to worry about misplacing a few coins, he said. A significant amount is known about Nickerson through court records—he was fairly litigious, Chartier noted—but the dig reveals that he was in the "upper tier of people living in Plymouth Colony" at the time.

Originally from Norwich, England, Nickerson and his family came to America in the late 1630s. By 1640 they were living in Yarmouth, and in 1656 Nickerson purchased four square miles around the Ryder's Cove area from Mattaquason, the Monomoyick sachem. However, he failed to get permission for the purchase from the authorities in Plymouth; they sued, eventually allowing him 100 acres after he paid a fine. Following correct procedures, Nickerson later purchased much of what is now Chatham.

This year's dig concentrated on locating outbuildings and "chasing stains" to determine the exact area of the palisade. A small, four-foot cellar hole proved to be "almost like a time capsule," yielding pieces of European and English pottery, wine glasses, a book hinge, a silver cufflink, and many pipe stems, a number of which indicated that one of the smokers who lived at the site had an overbite. Post holes were also found near the cellar, which may indicate that there was a barn, or possibly an earlier house, at the location, Chartier said.

The site was intensely used for a short period of time. After William Nickerson died sometime in the 1690s, it appears as if the location was abandoned. Chartier said small nails that would have been used in the structure were not found, which would have been the case if it had remained in place and deteriorated. That seems to indicate that the house was moved elsewhere, which wasn't uncommon at the time.

There were also indications that the site was used by the native Monomoyicks for centuries. The dig uncovered a 3,000-year-old spear point as well as a 2,500-year-old blade, along with Native pottery and other items. The lack of large shell middens, however, seems to indicate that the site was not a village but perhaps occupied seasonally or only periodically for specific tasks, which was typical of Native settlement patterns on Cape Cod.

In many ways the site was ideal, little disturbed after the Nickerson occupation; it was a chicken farm into the 1960s, and has been owned by the Conservation Foundation since 1988. The digs turned up thousands of artifacts, including some that even Chartier couldn't identify. He said social media has proven to be helpful in this area. A photo of a tool that the archaeologists could not identify was posted on Facebook, for instance, and found to be a type of knife used in shoemaking.

"There are so many elements we don't see in New England archaeology," he said of the site.

Last week the excavation holes were covered up. Chartier said he believes he has met the goals of the project, and although he'd like to return and do more digging in the area around the house, he doesn't expect further excavations to reveal any major surprises.

Over the fall and winter Chartier and his crew will wash, analyze and identify the artifacts and write a final report. The Nickerson Association may seek funding to do more sophisticated lab tests on some of the artifacts to try to learn more about William and Anne Nickerson's life at the site.

Once Chartier has completed his work, an exhibit of the artifacts will be assembled and travel locally, eventually ending up in a permanent display in town at an as-yet-unidentified location. At this point the Nickerson Association is not planning any further digs, although the site will be marked with an interpretive sign, and the home's heart may be opened and displayed under Plexiglas; those plans are currently being discussed with the Conservation Foundation.

On one of the final days of the dig, a large key was discovered in the cellar hole; it may have been a key to the house or to a chest. The archaeologists saw it symbolic of locking up work on the Nickerson house. But what was discovered there will not soon be forgotten, said Chartier.

"It's something we'll be continuing to research and look at the artifacts for years to come," he said.

An Appeal for Your Annual Support

By James Nickerson, Immediate Past President

My Dear Cousins:

I am writing to update you on the remarkable achievements you supported in 2019. You helped lead an effort to provide a new view of the Colonial era through the archaeological dig, which is shedding a fresh light on how our forebears lived and worked and contributed to America's founding and heritage.

Together in 2019 we utilized electronic-based research and good old-fashioned paper chasing to advance the Samuel Book due in large part to our professional genealogist, Gail Blankeneau, with the oversight of Nancy Corey. We reprinted Book V so that, along with Books I to III, we can engage with many more Nickersons of all ages.

We reach all four corners of America and beyond, across the globe, with this, our semiannual newsletter.

Your support has made our "Hand-On-History" programming at the Caleb Nickerson Homestead a success in the Chatham community and on the Cape in general. Hands-On-History is designed to engage folks who live in the surrounding communities and make them aware of the Nickersons. The programming, which is the brainchild of Debra Lawless, our executive director, has attracted standing room only crowds. Some of the featured programs are focused on the participation of children and their education. Recently a group of children participated in Kids Dig. Archaeologist Craig Chartier taught them the correct way to dig and where to dig to contribute the most knowledge of William and Anne's homestead. Much to everyone's delight, one of the children found a coin minted in 1640!

In this newsletter, you will find information and updates about all of these achievements in 2019, but I would like to pause here for a moment to tell you how grateful I am for your support of the Nickerson Family Association.

It is especially fitting that as we celebrate our achievements in 2019, we stop and say thank you, and once again recognize you for your dedication to our mission. Your generosity supports the NFA and your legacy is the impact of the NFA's outreach.

The NFA's Mission Statement focuses on this critical point. It states:

Mission: The increase and diffusion of knowledge associated with the Nickerson Family.

The NFA's Vision Statement further supports this point. It states:

Vision: Shaping the future by preserving our heritage, discovering new knowledge of our roots, and sharing our resources with the world.

So, while I have said it many times before, it bears repeating . . . everything we accomplish is only possible due to your generosity and the financial support of all our dedicated benefactors. As you know, we receive no federal or state government funding. That is what makes your gifts so important – and so deeply appreciated.

Here is a peek at our 2020 Hands-On-History programming:

- Plein-air painters return;
- Beekeepers give a demonstration;
- Colonial gardening -- Sonny Gada leads floral workshops and more
- Other show-and-tell events now under consideration

The NFA is proud to engage the local citizens of the Cape with unique and enlightening programming that draws them to the NFA Campus. As we catalogue and interpret the artifacts found in the dig, we will incorporate that newfound knowledge in our programming.

Please consider a donation in support of your NFA and the work it is doing to further our mission. Thank you again for your dedication and support of the NFA.

The NFA Board of Directors,

A word from President David Dillman...

New Beginnings and Looking Ahead to 2020 Events

Dear Nickerson Cousins:

We heard recently from our president and treasurer, Jim Nickerson, that he needed to leave his offices due to health concerns. It is my honor as vice president to succeed him as president. By vote of the board of directors, board members Debra Sweetman and Bob Nickerson will fill the offices of vice president and treasurer for the remainder of their predecessors' terms. We are grateful for Jim's work on behalf of the NFA, and we send him our best wishes that 2020 finds him in improving health.

I am what I call a "double Nickerson," descended through my New York mother's side from Nicholas, and through my father's Oklahoma side from Sarah, children of Anne and William. That is not as special as you might imagine, as the Nickersons stayed close to family and friends as they traveled America and the world. While the Nickersons' purchase of land on the Cape was frowned upon by the leaders at Plymouth, their children looked beyond those differences, marrying among their families, and so we have many Nickerson descendants who will celebrate their connections to the 400th Mayflower anniversary next year.

My work includes respiratory therapy, medical product sales, electronic records for hospitals, and real estate brokerage. My life includes three amazing daughters. I have served as president of a volunteer fire company in Pennsylvania, as president of my homeowner's association, and president of my own sales firm for cardiac products, pacemakers, catheters and defibrillators.

In 2019 the excavation of William and Anne's House continued and completed its second full season. It was in 2016 that archaeologist Craig Chartier confirmed that the c. 1664 homestead which our family established lay only a couple hundred yards from our NFA campus.

What we had not foreseen was the treasure trove of artifacts that establish and illuminate the history of the Nickerson family. The size of the main house, and the purposes to which William and Anne put the property, appear to be unique to this family pursuing a new start in America. William and Anne lived non-conformist lives. A weaver, William appears to have tested the possibility of iron smelting, undertook fishing for sustenance, and had a collegial relationship with the natives on Cape Cod, interacting for business, and sharing the spaces which now seem so settled and serene.

Now that the dig has been completed, Chartier will devote the winter to cataloging the artifacts and analyzing their particulars. In a most serendipitous fashion, a child discovered a 1640 Scottish penny during the Kids Dig event held on the final days of the season. The coin helps to date the artifacts around it, and gives our archaeologist a unique find that may be unprecedented in this part of Early Colonial America. Numerous tobacco pipe stems were discovered. The wear patterns on them reveal the shape of the teeth of the user, or users. At least one of the smokers had an overbite. William, and perhaps Anne, spent their leisure overlooking Ryder's Cove smoking a bowl.

We look forward to the publication of Chartier's comprehensive report on his findings in the spring.

The NFA has stepped up to make these amazing discoveries that will permanently preserve our family's origins in America. The costs of such endeavors are extraordinary. The revelations that have been revealed by our archaeologists, both professional and volunteer, defy imagination.

While in 2020 we will celebrate our Pilgrim connections during our annual reunion on the Outer Cape (Sept. 11-14), we will also be challenged in ways we have never been before. I will give my family the gift of memberships in NFA, to assure they know their family's history, and appreciate the difference their family has made on Cape Cod, across America, and indeed around the world. Those dues will help keep the stories alive. You, too, can give the gift of membership. NFA membership makes a great stocking stuffer gift!

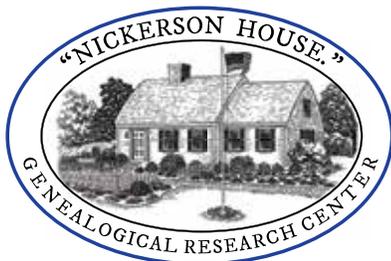

I plan to include the NFA in a part of my estate planning, too. My grandchildren and theirs deserve to learn about their spot in history, and their origins in the corner of America that made all the difference.

I wish my Nickerson cousins Happy Holidays in the days to come. Thank you for your generosity. Thank you for being my family!

Come Home to the NFA

Nickerson cousins often ask me why they should become members of the NFA. It's easy and exciting to answer this question. Yes, once you are a member you can explore the NFA's proprietary database, The Nickerson Genealogy (TNG). You'll receive the NFA's newsletter, and invitations to fun events and workshops. But there's nothing comparable to the feeling that joining the NFA gives you because you're joining a family, a community.

No matter your age, you can come home again.

I regularly meet Nickersons from all over the country—and world—who visit the NFA. The excitement in the eyes of first-time visitors is wonderful to see. Some cousins become emotional knowing that they're standing only a few feet from where their immigrant pioneer ancestors, William and Anne, built their homestead in 1664. Others are enchanted by the 1829 Caleb Nickerson Homestead. A special treat comes to Nickersons who want to delve into a bit of genealogy. When they see the names of their parents, grandparents and great-grandparents hand-written in our files, they know they're home.

Next year's reunion is going to be spectacular as we also hail the 400th anniversary of the Mayflower's landing in Provincetown and Plymouth. Our 123rd Nickerson reunion will be based partly in Eastham, an area the Pilgrims explored back in 1620. We hope you will consider joining your family from September 11 to 14, 2020.

You'll feel right at home.

Why Do a DNA Test?

By Nancy Corey

People test their DNA for various reasons. Some people want to learn their ethnicity, while others might want to verify their research, search for ancestors or search for relatives. There are those who are just searching, searching for answers, looking for their biological relatives, parents, father. Anyone testing should be aware that they may uncover family secrets, scandals and skeletons. Our ancestors were human, after all.

I have tested at various companies using a variety of DNA tests. I wasn't looking for any surprises, and frankly didn't expect to find any. My children, grandchildren, cousins, and niece have all tested. Looking at my results everyone "fits" exactly where they should. I see lots of relatives and I can "fit" them exactly as they should be. Everything is good. Nope, no surprises. Until seven months ago. I logged into my Ancestry.com DNA and skimmed down the list and stopped. I had a new very close match and had no idea who this match was. Looking at shared matches I quickly determined this match was on my dad's side and the shared matches were definitely in my Nickerson line. In fact, this match was so close I quickly determined that she was, most probably, a first cousin-- yep, a Nickerson first cousin. Problem was I had exactly one Nickerson first cousin, and this match was not him. A few genealogical colleagues took a look, and we all came to the same conclusion: I had a previously-unknown first cousin.

Contacting my match I found, yes, that she was searching for her biological father. Comparing the information she had on her biological father, and my sleuthing, we quickly determined we were, indeed first cousins. A DNA test from my dad confirmed the relationship. My uncle, who is deceased, had a daughter he had not known about. My match, although disappointed to not meet her father, has gained new relatives: an uncle, a half-brother, and numerous cousins and extended family. We have gained a wonderful new cousin. So, why DNA? Jenny is why. Without DNA she would not have the answers she was seeking, and I would not have her in my life. It's that simple.

ROOTS AND BRANCHES

FALLEN BRANCHES

Ellen St. Sure

Ellen St. Sure, 90, of Brewster died on July 8. She was the resident archivist of the Town of Brewster, and the author of the book With a Passion for Brush and Palette: Giddings H. Ballou and His Cape Cod Portraits c. 1841-1861. St. Sure was born in Oakland, Calif. and graduated from Bennington College. She later edited the Hudson Review and worked as a journalist for the Jerusalem Post in Israel. She returned to the San Francisco Bay Area with her three children and worked for a PhD in English Literature at the University of California, Berkeley. She later served as an adjunct professor of English at Stanford University. She is survived by three children—Dor, Noa and Pico—seven grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

Ian M. Mott

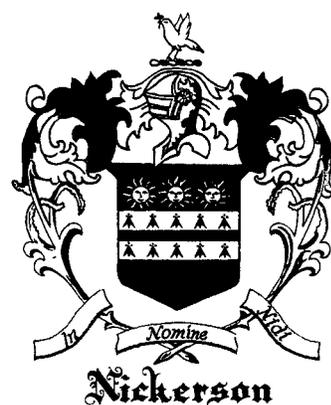

Ian M. Mott, 95, died on June 22. He was the husband of Janet Mott, who died in 2003. Janet Mott served as the NFA's president from 1979 to 1982. Ian Mott graduated from Cambridge Academy in 1943 and was drafted into the U.S. Army to fight in WWII. He served as a mechanic in the 297th and followed General Patton around Western Europe. His unit was the first to arrive at Buchenwald Concentration camp at the end of the war. In 1949, after the war, he married his wife. The couple settled in Acton and started their family. In 1963 they moved to Chatham, Janet's hometown. Among other jobs, Mott worked as a real estate broker. He is survived by daughters Cheryl Dumas of Southwick, Janet Mitchell of South Chatham and six grandchildren.

Clifford R. Rogers

Clifford R. Rogers, 68, of East Falmouth and Florida died on July 12 of a heart attack. He was the husband of Debra Rogers, daughter of Howard W. Nickerson. Following their marriage, Rogers was employed as the appliance repair man at his father-in-law's company Nickerson Appliance. Later he worked in home improvement in Falmouth.

Craig Robert Nickerson

Craig Robert Nickerson, 66, died on July 3 at home in Brewster. He was a son of Robert Clason Nickerson and Doris (Eldridge) Nickerson of Orleans. Nickerson grew up among many Cape Cod families such as the Snow, Reynolds and Deschamps families. Nickerson was a 1971 graduate of Nauset Regional High School and a 1975 graduate of the University of Massachusetts, Amherst where he earned a degree in political science. After partnering with his friend Robert Reynolds to create a boat building business in Orleans, he entered Boston College Law School, graduating in 1993. He began his legal career with the maritime law firm of Clinton and Muzyka in Boston. Returning to the Cape, he worked as an assistant district attorney at the Cape & Islands District Attorney's Office, eventually opening his own law practice on Main Street, Orleans. Nickerson is survived by his wife Donna Lynn Sawchuk of Brewster, his brother Stuart Nickerson of Brewster and his brother Allen of Orleans.

INTRODUCING THE BOOK OF THE MONTH

Just in time for the Mayflower 400 commemorations in 2020, we are pleased to note that we have in stock a fresh supply of two classic books by W. Sears Nickerson. The books are thanks to a generous gift of board member D. Scott Nickerson.

In Land Ho! 1620: A Seaman's Story of the Mayflower—Her Construction, Her Navigation and her First Landfall, Nickerson wrote a meticulously-researched account of the Mayflower's 1620 journey around the 50-mile “back side” of Cape Cod from Monomoy to Provincetown. The story is told from the perspective of a seaman.

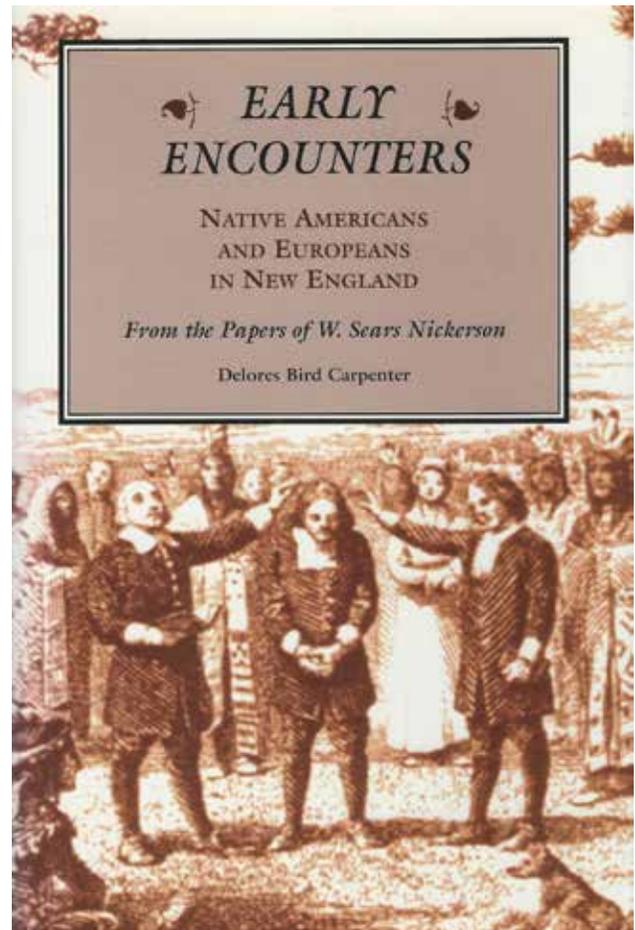

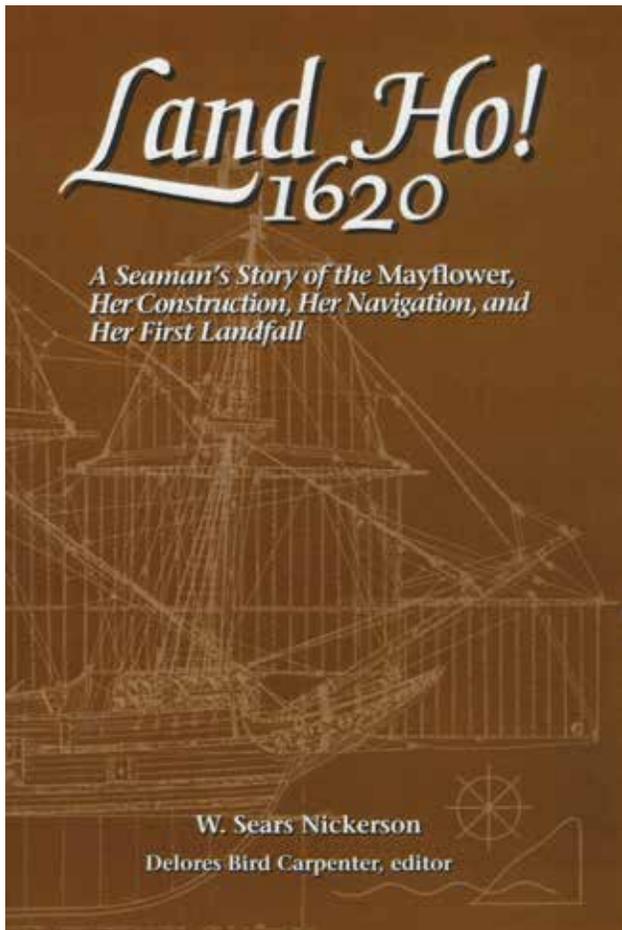

Nickerson (1880-1966) was a ninth-generation descendant of William and Anne Nickerson. No less than nine of his ancestors sailed aboard the Mayflower, offering him a special perspective on and connection to the event.

Also back in stock is Nickerson's Early Encounters: Native Americans and Europeans in New England. From the Papers of W. Sears Nickerson. This ground-breaking research highlights the relationship between the Monomoyicks and other tribes and the settlers. This topic is especially relevant today as archaeologist Craig Chartier continues to analyze the findings from the excavation of William and Anne's c. 1664 homestead. One of the puzzles Chartier hopes to illuminate is William and Anne's relationship with the local tribes.

Early Encounters contains 19 essays studying Nickerson's family ties to the Mayflower and his investigation of the first contacts between Europeans and Native Americans.

You can order the books online through www.nickersonassoc.com or by using the Gifts for Nicks form in this newsletter. Books make great gifts!

By the way, if you are a Mayflower descendant with a Nova Scotia connection, Brian Nickerson may be able to help you. Contact him at: bsmith1@ptd.net.
